THE SACRED CRESCENTS.

BY WILLIAM WESTALL.

A SECRET TRUST.

"That leaves twenty years of his life unaccounted for. Why did he not begin at the time he left home?"

"Probably because he now I had become interested in his interests in Central Asia, which he began accidentally, and I wanted him to continue. Besides, Yule is not a man you can get into questions. What it pleases him to tell us, he tells us more."

"I suppose you think I poster you with questions?" said Alicia tentily.

"Well, it looks so—"

"And so," interposed Mrs. Barton, "at any rate, anything that concerns Cousin Gilbert. Do repeat yourself, my dear, and tell me all what he has heard. I am sure it will be interesting than your queries and will be more interesting."

Alicia hurried to the repose, and for a while gazed from queries and comments, and Barton spread his narrative, out of which, however, it proved more difficult than he had expected to keep the sacred crescents in their interest. He was compelled to give the reins to his imagination, and equivocated somewhat. In order to shield Yule's exceptional treatment of himself, and the Sultan's indifference, he invented a taleman, which in his character as a Mussulman, Yule carried about with him, and ascribed his desire to meet Alicia at Lahore to a natural anxiety to ascertain how it had fared with him and his wife and daughter after they had parted.

Alicia admitted a distinct though impatient glint until her brother came to the episode of the master at the oboe. Then she broke in with another question.

"Are you telling this part of the story as it is told?"

"Of course I am," answered Tom sharply.

"Thus you may depend on it Cousin Gilbert kept something back. I think he tries to make our girl shabby, desiring her, as he does, on their wedding day, though it was now like a few days, perhaps a few weeks, ago."

"You forgot, dear, that he forced into the marriage," said Mrs. Barton, "and as there was no ceremony—"

"Of course there was. The ceremony was taking place over and over again. Cousin Gilbert making her. It seems to me that marriage by capture is just as proper in Turkey as it is by a person in India."

Tom, however, did not require much further explanation. He was a good-humoured, though impatient, young man, and his eyes were bright and full of life.

"I suppose you think I poster you with questions?" said Alicia tentily.

"Well, I dare say, as we shall have to know all about him, or as much as we want to know, later on," remarked Tom indefinitely.

"Strange that Tyrrel has heard of that attempt on Yule's life at Peshawar," he thought.

"As it had to do with the sacred crescents I rather alured it over, and now J'licia has the whole story, which I will tell you now to 10 to 1 she does not know."

On the following day Barton went to London about his business. He was a junior partner in the firm of Arklow Brothers and Barton (in which his father had been one of the seniors), bankers and army agents, who had offices in Corkhill and Pall Mall, and branches in India.

The house being rather overmastered with junior Tom, who had a back side to his head, and didn't care for hunting, I should like to know what he is up to?"

In my opinion Cousin Gilbert was over-had and care in love with Shirane—which makes his devotion of her all the more indefensible—and now he makes light of the matter and pretends that it was not legal, and that, in order to ensure his next marriage, I suppose he'd marry again, unless Alicia—"

"Of course he was married again—to Alicia's sister, Leah Alarcos," quoth Tom indignantly.

"And I shall be obliged if you will bring along absurd remarks and allow me to prove—"

"Please go on, Tom, and if you interrupt me, Alicia, when I shall—be pleased," said his mother, speaking less mildly than was her wont.

So Tom went on to a conclusion, taking care to say nothing about the discovery in the desert, and very little about Yule's sojourn in the Afghan mountains. Tom, however, had been most ingeniously shot, and shortly afterwards Kannan set out also for his own country. Neither did he make any mention of Alarcos' journey in search of the lost crescent, of the charge he had imposed on Yule, nor of the exchange of letters, and his own promise to Yule. These omissions, and a few unimportant curtailments, made Tom's narrative so much shorter than the original story that it was easily told to Tom, and he did not mind.

"What would you have him do? If he made himself a Christian he would have his throat cut in no time, and Yule did not give Central Asia to make a martyr of himself."

"That may be so, but I am sure it is not right to let him go."

"Perhaps he had no religion to renounce, when I interposed Alicia."

"Ah, at that time he had an open mind about religion," added Tom, "and if you have strong convictions nothing is easier than to accept Islamism. All you need do is to say that you believe in one God and that Mahomet was his prophet, and nobody can say he was not a prophet. But when he was born he was not born to Central Asia to make a martyr of himself."

"That may be so, but I am sure it is not right to let him go."

"I don't know that he did; only outwardly behaved," replied Tom.

"But surely that was worse."

"I don't know that he did; only outwardly behaved," replied Tom.

"But surely that was worse."

"What would you have him do? If he made himself a Christian he would have his throat cut in no time, and Yule did not give Central Asia to make a martyr of himself."

"That may be so, but I am sure it is not right to let him go."

"Perhaps he had no religion to renounce, when I interposed Alicia."

"Ah, at that time he had an open mind about religion," added Tom, "and if you have strong convictions nothing is easier than to accept Islamism. All you need do is to say that you believe in one God and that Mahomet was his prophet, and nobody can say he was not a prophet. But when he was born he was not born to Central Asia to make a martyr of himself."

NEWCASTLE, Sunday.

A Gloucester senior 15 met a Newcastle representative team on the Union Ground yesterday and played a draw game, scoring 8 points each. The weather was dull for the greater part of the day, and about midway some faint rain fell, but when the referee (Mr. T. Pauling) sounded his whistle for the commencement of hostilities the rain had ceased and such of the large crowd of spectators drawn to witness the game without the comfort of a neighbour's umbrella. The game was a fairly good exhibition, conducted by the rules that are in vogue in this part of the country. In the first half, when the ball was at the corner, the referee called for a free kick, and to hold for the early part of the game.

The result of the contest was a win for New South Wales by 13 points to 8, after one of the finest and most exciting exhibitions of Rugby that has been witnessed in Sydney. It was not an attractive game the first between the two sides on the previous Saturday, but it was sounded in defence and more exciting because of fluctuating scores from time to time. At half-time the score was 5 to 5. The second half saw a much more interesting game, with the ball being held for a free kick, and to hold for the early part of the game.

that the bill was a difficult and complex one to frame, but, in the opinion of leading experts in Great Britain, it is now the best measure dealing with the subject that has yet been framed.

State Children.—The Attorney-General has drafted a bill which will completely remove the system of affording relief to State children from present different forms of care experienced by various departments, some being looked after by the Home Department, and others by the Child Secretary or the Department of Justice. The result is overlapping and a conflict of authority. The bill provides for central control. Two sets of guardians will be appointed, one for male children and the other for female children, the latter being women. Full charge of the children will be given to them during the whole period of their tutorage. In the case of females, if they will be confirmed, will they be 18 years of age? Protection will be made so that children can be removed from one institution to another. Some may be sent to homes or boarded out, and others placed in dormitories. It is proposed that power shall be given to magistrates to commit children directly to the custody of the guardians instead of sending them to gaol, and it will be for the guardians to decide as to what particular institution they shall be sent to. The bill will be introduced without delay. Mr. Wise states the new legislation has been worked successfully in South Australia for some years.

Law Business.—The third Term of the Supreme Court at the present year will open this morning at the Barrow Court, and the settings of the Equity and Admiralty Courts will be resumed. The Central Criminal Court is also to start at Darlinghurst. In the Industrial Arbitration Court the work is to commence with several sittings in Chambers. Application will be made in the matter of the Professional Musicians' Association of Australia v. J. C. Williamson, to spend issues; and motions to set aside issues will be submitted in the case of the Truly, Drayman and Carters' Union v. W. H. Williams. The Wash and Proprietary Company are to ask for an adjournment to give an answer to the claim brought against them. The cases to be heard in Court to-day consist of the dispute between the New South Wales branch of the Cigar-makers Union of Australia and Arthur Hirschman, of 12 Abercrombie-street, Redfern, cigar manufacturer, and an application by certain manufacturers in connection with a re-export dispute between the Newcastle Wharf Labourers' Union and the Hunter River Steamship Company.

The Main.—The mails by the R.M.S. Assago, dated London June 14 and Vancouver June 27, will reach Sydney in time for delivery at about 12.45 p.m. to-day, and the Indian mails, dated London June 26, by the R.M.S. Australis, will reach Sydney in time for delivery to-morrow.

A Smart Pianist.—The A.U.S.N. liner Aramac, which sailed yesterday from Queensland ports, and yesterday from Brisbane, the passage from Moreton to Sydney heads being arranged in 32 hours and 30 minutes. Among the passengers by the Aramac was the Hon. J. H. West, M.L.C., K.C., who has returned from a visit to Japan.

A Large Gold Shipment.—The steamship Average, which arrived yesterday from Queensland ports brought seven boxes containing 7765 ozs. of gold, of the value of £28,162, shipped at Townsville. Of this quantity 5807 ozs. of the value of £20,460 was consigned to the Union Bank of Australia, and 1956 ozs. value at £1772 to the Queensland National Bank. Captain Slatkin, accompanied by a small police escort, delivered the precious metal at the Mint shortly after the arrival of the steamer.

It is elsewhere announced that speed examinations is shorthand, in connection with the New South Wales section of the Incorporated Photographic Society of London, will be held on August 20.

The New York and Brooklyn Telephone Company have agreed to forward to the telephone company of the three offered in competition, to design a post box that would attract attention to their "Old Time" tobacco. We have now received a first prize to the design of Mr. G. E. Smith, who has given the post box to the artist and the printer.
